Most upper division courses are organized into studio concentrations: ceramics, drawing, painting, printmaking, and sculpture. Students majoring in Art typically choose a primary studio concentration and take its 300-level courses and 400-level courses.
All 300-level and 400-level courses within each st must be taken in numerical order.	udio co	ncentra	tion
Upper division courses in art & technology, digital images & photography, graphic design, interactive media, print design, and video & animation are organized differently from the studio concentrations described above. Students taking these courses as part of the Art minor must meet with an academic advisor from the department.
